Merger update

At recent employee meetings throughout the company, management discussed the “checklist” of regulatory items we must complete prior to closing the proposed transaction. One of those items is to make a filing with the Department of Justice related to what’s referred to as the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act waiting period. It requires companies to give federal authorities notice and time to review proposed business combinations. The Department of Justice staff indicated to us that we could make the filing, and we expect to do so in the next few days. Then, if within 30 days no action has been taken on the filing, that particular regulatory obstacle will be behind us.

In addition, today we settled the lawsuits filed by parties objecting to the transaction. As we shared earlier, it is common to have someone file a lawsuit when mergers are announced. We were able to settle those lawsuits by simply modifying some of the language in the bidding documents. With that, the litigants agreed to stand down.

We will continue to share merger process updates as additional information becomes available.
